COUNTY TO CO-OPERATE ON "GOOD ROADS DAY"

Public Meeting Indorses Governor Brumbaugh's Plan.

PROCLAMATION ISSUED

Central Committee Named to Organize Extensive Movement and Direct Repair Work on Township Roads on Wednesday May 26th.

At the call of Judge Orvis a public meeting was held at the Court House Tuesday evening to take action on Governor Brumbaugh's suggestion that next Wednesday, May 26th, be observed over the entire State as "Good Roads Day." The Governor's thought is that every able-bodied man in Pennsylvania turn out on that day and help make repairs to township roads. The idea was heartily indorsed at Tuesday night's meeting and a committee was appointed to arouse interest in the work of repairing the roads in Centre County on that day. In appointing the committee it was aimed to make it a representative of the entire County, the movement being one handled directly by the people and independently of the State Highway Department although officials of the department will co-operate in every way possible. The committee met yesterday and issued an appeal to the people of the County to turn out next Wednesday and each person do his part to repair the roads It is Governor Brumbaugh's intention to take off his coat and work with a pick and shovel on "Good Roads Day."

Judge Orvis was chosen chairman and H. Laird Curtin secretary of Tuesday evening's meeting. Numerous suggestions were offered for organizing and advancing the work to be done on the 26th. Considerable enthusiasm was manifested and the belief was expressed that if the same spirit of co-operation is displayed throughout Centre County several thousand men will voluntarily devote the one day designated to repairing the roads in their respective home vicinities.

SCRATCH ON HAND LED TO R. A. BECK'S DEATH

Blood Poisoning Fatal to Old-Time Citizen.

TO BE BURIED TODAY

Barber Beck, Man of Many Peculiarities, Made Life Brighter for Scores of Persons in Need—Resided Here Third of Century.

Surprise mingled with genuine sorrow attended the announcement Monday morning of the death of R. A. Beck, for thirty-seven years a resident of Bellefonte. His death occurred at 9.20 o'clock that morning at the Bellefonte hospital and was due to blood poisoning which had inception in a slight puncture of his right hand by a small wire nail on Monday evening of last week. The wound was of such a trifling character that he paid no attention to it at the time. His system became infected, however, and when his arm began to swell he consulted a physician. One week ago today he was removed to the hospital. There his condition rapidly became worse. An attack of grip aggravated matters, the poison from the wound in the hand spread through his system and his condition was recognized to be exceedingly grave. Heroic measures were adopted. The right arm and then the shoulder was cut in a fruitless effort to check the spread of the poison.

It was not until Saturday night that Mr. Beck's serious condition became generally known to the community. On Sunday it was stated that he was very low and that he might not recover. There were numerous anxious inquiries from sympathetic friends but no word of encouragement came from the sick room. Shortly after 9 o'clock Monday morning came the news that the end had come.

Today the body was removed to St. John's Protestant Episcopal church. At 3 o'clock it will be removed to the Union cemetery for interment. The services at the grave will be in the hands of Bellefonte Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which the deceased was a member. Representatives of the Logan Hose Company, with which he was actively identified, will be in attendance

"Barber Beck" was perhaps the best known resident of all this section of the county. He had his pecularities—just as all of us have. Some there were who knew him only because of these peculiarities. But many there were who knew him because of a kindly, charitable, generous disposition which made his friendship worth while. He did numerous little acts of kindness of which the public-at-large heard nothing. The beautiful part of his life was that he tried in his own way to help those who needed help, and he never waited to be asked. Such service as he could render was volunteered. Many of us will long remember the familiar figure of Barber Beck as he would drive out to the hospital Sunday mornings to shave the poor and needy. The same free service he cheerfully rendered in a number of humble homes. He always was deeply interested in the public schools, and many a little trinket from him found its way into the hands of the children.

If Barber Beck had a stronger liking for any one thing more so than another it was his infatuation for the volunteer fire service. In a fireman's uniform he was in his glory, but he was never satisfied with the parade side of the fireman's life. The sounding of the fire alarm found him among the first to respond and he helped as he best knew how. For years he was a member of the Logan Hose Company. One of his proudest possessions was a badge awarded him as the most popular fireman in Bellefonte. The badge was won in a contest conducted by the old "Daily News" somewhere about 1896. He wore the priceless little badge when he was removed to the hospital.

Mr. Beck was born in Germany June 7th, 1850. When a lad of 17 years he came to this country. He spent a short time in Philadelphia and then went to Danville where he learned the barber's trade with an uncle. Later he located in Huntingdon, where he engaged in business. In 1878 he came to Bellefonte, and here he remained to the time of his death. He was twice married. Surviving are his second wife and two children: Robert A. Jr., and Mary Jane. There survive also a brother, Eugene, and a sister.

Ray Noll, son of William H. Noll, Jr., of Pleasant Gap, was brought home from the West seriously ill on Monday and removed to the Bellefonte hospital for treatment.

FIRST WEEK OF COURT WAS REMARKABLY BRIEF

Adjournment Tuesday Morning Until Next Monday.

MANY CASES SETTLED

Few Criminal Matters for Juries to Consider and Civil List Rapidly Cleaned up—Jurors and Witnesses Here But Two Days.

Court convened on Monday morning, grand jury called and sworn and M. S. Fiedler, of Millheim, selected as foreman. List of traverse jurors called and absentees noted. The constables of the several townships, boroughs and wards then made their quarterly return to court.

The civil list for the present week was then called over and disposed of as follows:

Victor Strange vs. James Stott, appeal; continued by agreement.

S. D. Stine vs. Harry Gunther, appeal; settled.

This cleans up all the civil cases for the week.

The second week's trial list called over and the following cases disposed of:

Wilbur H. Wining vs. Wilson G. Frantz, trespass; defendants appeared in court and three other men interpleaded, the one of them being the owner of the land and asked to be made defendants together with Mr. Frantz. The plea was allowed and the cause continued, on account of this change of pleading.

Oscar L. Rishel vs. Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Centre County, action in assumpsit; continued by agreement of counsel.

A large number of motions and petitions were presented to the court by the several members of the bar, after which court adjourned until Monday afternoon.

Com. vs. Ellis Huey; indicted for betrayal; prosecutrix, Tracy L. Shipley. Defendant plead guilty and the usual sentence was imposed.

Comm. vs. George Garrett, indicted for larceny, prosecutor A. R. Barr, railroad policeman. The defendant waived the finding and plead guilty to taking a lantern from the Railroad Company April 13, 1915. By consent of the District Attorney sentence was suspended.

Comm. vs. H. Garfinkle, indicted for receiving stolen goods known to be stolen. Prosecutor, John Barnes. This case is from Philipsburg. The Barnes Coal Company missed a lot of copper wire, and upon investigation found that one William Lehman had sold wire to the defendant, a junk dealer, and the wire was found at the Beech Creek Railroad Station and identified as the property of the prosecutor's coal mine. The defendant and Lehman were arrested in the office of the Justice of the Peace. Lehman admitted taking the wire and selling it to the defendant, and alleged according to some of the testimony produced on the part of the Comm. that the defendant knew that it was stolen. The defendant, however, denied this and the case went to the jury, who found him guilty of the charge. William Lehman, the man who actually committed the larceny, is one of the men, who with Henry Gordon broke out of the County Jail several weeks ago.

Other criminal cases listed were as follows:

Comm. vs. William G. Slagle, charge, larceny; prosecutor, E. J. Williams; settled.

STREET LIGHTING COST IS UP FOR DISCUSSION

State-Centre Electric Co. Wants Ten Year Contract.

COMPARISON OF RATES

Lewistown Gets Much Lower Rate for Arc Lamps than Bellefonte is Asked to Pay and Thereby Effects Big Saving to Tax Payers.

The cost of street lighting is likely to develop considerable discussion between Bellefonte borough Council and representatives of the State-Centre Electric Co. before a ten years contract with the company is signed. This was revealed at Monday night's meeting of Council when the Special Committee recommended that prices for arc lamps submitted some months ago by the State-Centre Electric Co. be accepted. When these prices were submitted no particular kind of arc light was specified. Council's Special Committee on Monday night recommended thirteen flaming arc lights on Allegheny Street between Bishop and Howard, and on High Street from the Diamond to the Pennsylvania Railroad passenger station. H. J. Thompson, local manager of the State-Centre Electric Co., was present with N. B. Spangler as counsel. Mr. Spangler promptly declared that this type of arc light would be furnished but that it would cost the borough more than the price specified in the contract originally submitted by the State-Centre Electric Co. This price was $66 per arc light per year.

"Your contract as submitted did not limit the borough as to the type of arc light", spoke up Councilman Lyon.

"Is it the thought of Council's committee to ask the State-Centre Electric Co. to install this type of arc light at the rate of $66 mentioned in the contract?" queried Mr. Spangler.

"That is the thought of the committee", replied Councilman Brockerhoff. To this Councilman Lyon added: "The committee so recommends."

"But this type of arc light will cost more money", said Mr. Spangler.

Mr. Lyon picked up a copy of the contract and after a hasty glance through it he said: "The wording of the contract is 'for each arc lamp.' The contract does not specify any particular type of arc lamp."

"That would be a matter for discussion", was Mr. Spangler's only reply.

The remark by counsel for the State-Centre Electric Co. that a higher rate would be necessary if the flaming arc lamp should be required opened up the subject of rates charged in Bellefonte and some striking comparisons with rates in other towns were volunteered by members of Council. Reference was made to rates charged in Lewistown and emphasis was placed on the fact that these rates are much lower than the State-Centre Electric Co. wishes to charge in its contract and without giving the borough the type of arc lamp desired. In the midst of the discussion President Walker ruled that the remarks were out of order.

Lewistown as recently as last week entered into a ten years contract with the Penn Central Light & Power Co. at rates which mean a saving to that borough of $2,254.40 annually as compared with rates paid under the expiring contract. The significant feature is that the old rate per arc lamp in Lewistown was but $65, or $1 per lamp less than the State-Centre Electric Co. proposes charging Bellefonte for the next ten years. Under its new contract Lewistown will pay but $43 per arc lamp, or $13 per arc lamp less than it is proposed charging Bellefonte borough. In entering into the ten year contract Lewistown borough reserves the right to discontinue the contract either at the end of one year or at the end of five years.

The resolution adopted by the Lewistown borough Council in accepting the contract with the Penn Central Light & Power Co. is published herewith and reads as follows:

"Be it resolved, That the Lewistown borough council accept the 10 year proposal submitted by the Penn Central Light and Power company for lighting the streets of our borough at $43.00 per year per arc of 216 watts and 400 candle power and $12.20 per year for 71.3 watt 150 candle power, both kinds of lights to be of the new nitro mazda lamp style, the borough to reserve the right to discontinue this contract at the end of one year by giving the Penn Central Light and Power company 30 days' written notice and paying the said company

News and Views of Women.

By Julia Catherine Gray.

A Sketch of Suffrage Day in Philadelphia by a Parader.

The day broke in gloom, and some faint hearts were filled with fear lest old Sol's political smile had been turned toward the ranks of pink roses and those stanch adherents to the theory but not the practice that "woman's place is in the home." His fickleness, however, did not last, for as the time approached to form and to leave Independence Square he brushed away his frown and beamed broadly on the First Day of May with its endless decorations of golden splendor and its feminine rally for "Votes for Women." That smile of his did much to enhance the appearance of the parade.

The dailies have variously estimated that four, ten, and twelve thousand were in marching line. But the Anti adders declare these returns to be false, and they ought to know, because they left "home" to take care of itself (significantly inconsistent), and with their little adding machine established themselves in a hotel to see fair play. They recorded our number as a little over 3,000. This discrepancy in numbers ought to impress some of us with the fact that we do not count for as much as we may imagine.

The number being as it may, a great throng marched by, flaunting their yellow capes, flags, pennants, sashes, and flowers through out the procession of women who know what they want. By this parade and that for which it stands they offer a continuous opportunity for men to extend chivalry toward the womanhood of the world. If men but take advantage of this high privilege, the Antis will no longer have cause to worry over their losses from the anticipated withdrawal of chivalry on the part of men. And do not men owe it to the Antis to set their minds free from such concern as to the future treatment to be received at their hands?

It was a parade that filled the hearts of the participants and their sympathizers with pride. The vast crowd of spectators along the two mile line of march gazed upon group after group of business women, social workers, professional women, college women representative of Bryn Mawr, Swarthmore, Vassar, Smith, Radcliffe, Wellesley; motherly women of modest homekeeping life; women cultured and uncultured; rich and poor and society women; all stepping together in the most conspicuous and democratic march on behalf of women ever witnessed.

The first bugle call rallied timid minds and no doubt sent a nervous thrill down many spines. Quickly-raised banners guided the direction of the moving mass; musical bands, which had been sternly forbidden to sound a doleful note,—as nothing but jubilant notes could express the height of feminine spirits on this day of days,—measured the tread, tread, tread of thousands of feet (it remains for the Antis to decide how many), and away went many women into a new experience which amounted to real adventure in their monotonous existence.

Hundreds of private automobiles, beautifully garlanded with flowers and operated by women, were in the line. Every preparation had been made for accidents, but if so much as a shoe lace gave way it was not reported. The participants observed the highest decorum and dignity; and the women one and all rose to the call and cheerfully gave of their best and at the same time stimulated their own self-respect.

The great parade ended in a large mass meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House with speeches by Dr. Shaw and other great Suffragists.

My Protest

Whenever I pay my taxes I attach a protest to my check. Thv following has just been sent to the collector:

I hereby emphatically register my protest against men levying taxes on my property and refusing me an expression of opinion as to how that money shall be expended for the public good.

A wise woman has recently said: "Men say they do not want to see women go to the polls, but did you ever hear of one saying he does not want women to pay taxes?"

No more do women desire to see their husbands, fathers, brothers, and sons frequenting saloons, keeping dens of vice, carrying on murderous war, sinking ships that carry their loved ones down to the ocean floor, hanging men by the neck, and making this world a generally disreputable and unpleasant place in which to live.

Some silly-witted man has said, "Women would rather raise hell than raise children." A superior woman replies to that, "Women want the vote so that they will not have to raise children in hell."

We women want to make this world a fit place to live in, so there will be no criminals, no wretchedly poor, no disreputable people in it.

We want bread for all, and roses too! Do you think it can't be done? Lend a hand to the women, throw your influence on the right side, encourage your friends to do the same, and see what a difference there will be!.

"The Emotional Sex" Again

In a recent paper we learn of one more of those innumerable cases where a man goes to war because a woman declines to marry him—"Hoping that a bullet would end me, as I had nothing else to live for," he wrote.

This extreme surrender to one's emotion, forgetting every other tie, duty, ambition, is by no means unusual, in males.

Further we are given one of the cases, also but too frequent, of a still more emotional young man, who shoots the girl who will not have him.

This is not only plain murder, but it is murder so worse than baseless, so aggravated by the previous admission of excellence involved in the offer of marriage, that one wishes there was more than one way of punishing such an idiotic villain—such a villainous plot.

Perhaps the plea of emotional insanity will be made. This seems to be a very common condition, and the sex in which it predominates should be trained with care, that they may learn to control their emotions. The Forerunner.

REVERSE LICENSE DECREES

Superior Court Says Technical Defects in Applications Not Vital.

That an application for liquor license must not be rejected because of technical defects in a petition is the decision of the Superior Court handed down in Pittsburgh last Friday. In several cases lower courts were reversed and re-hearings ordered.

In the matter of the appeal of F. N. English, who was refused a liquor license, the quarter sessions court of Tioga county was reversed in an order made by Chief Justice Charles E. Rice. The decision affects twenty-three other appeals from Tioga county based on the same reason. In reversing the lower court, Justice Rice says he does not decide that the license should be granted, but that the records should be remitted for further proceedings, according to law In reference to the ground taken by the lower court—that the advertised application was not in proper form—Judge Rice says it is not necessary that the advertisement be written with technical skill and precision and declares the notice was not misleading.

McClellan Cox, of Blain, Perry county, won his appeal from the recent liquor decision of that county court when the Superior Court ordered that a new hearing be given him on his application for a retail liquor license.

Licenses refused March 12 in addition to that of McClellan Cox were H. B. Rhinesmith and W. H. Atkinson, New Bloomfield: O. S. Stouffer, Carroll township; D. C. Nary, Spring township; Howard Keim, New Germantown; Albert Zaepfel and George W. Rhoads, Marysville; Milton W. Derrick and Samuel E. May, Duncannon: Robert Nixon and James Strauss, Newport; T. R. Shenk and Robert W. Hopple. Millerstown; Charles O. Mitchell and B. F. Brackenburg, Liverpool.

The decision of the court will have an important bearing on the other applicants for liquor licenses in Perry county, which has been dry since April 1.

Pot Grown Tomato Plants.

For earliness and largest yield tomato plants should be grown in tin cans, paper or earthen pots until danger of frost has passed and then be transplanted to the field or garden, says Professor M. G. Kains, head of the horticultural department of the Pennsylvania State College. The best results in last year's tests were obtained where several seeds were sown direct in each pot and all but the strongest plant weeded out. But nearly as good results were obtained when the seedlings were transplanted from flats first to pots and later to the field.

The poorest results were observed when the plants were moved from flats direct to the field. In the pot method the roots are all intact when transplanted and the plants are ready to bloom if not actually in blossom or with little fruits. Plants in flats, however, lose much of their root system and are therefore checked when moved to the open ground.

Professor C. E. Myers, of the State College faculty, has been conducting several tomato breeding experiments for which especially fine strains of the leading varieties have been grown in pots for this season's transplanting. The surplus plants are being sold off at the usual market prices for delivery about May 20 to those who send for them. In this way a large number of growers may become acquainted with the choicest varieties of this vegetable.

TWO GREAT INVENTORS.

Their Foresight Did Not Equal Their Ingenious Ability.

Not infrequently great inventors do not comprehend the significance of the thing they have produced. An interesting anecdote of two famous men of science whose foresight did not equal their inventive ability appears in Les Inventions Illustrees.

When Hertz first began to obtain satisfactory results from his now famous researches into the possibility of transmitting electric waves certain men of science suggested that some day similar vibrations might serve to transmit messages through space. Hertz laughed at the hypothesis and assured all comers that his experiments were for laboratories only. Now, after a few short years, it is hard to find a single issue of a daily paper that does not record some noteworthy example of the use of wireless telegraphy.

Levassor was the great engineer who sketched the automobile with such skill that his design has not been materially changed to this day. After Levassor accomplished his historic trip from Paris to Bordeaux and return at the dizzy speed of about fifteen miles an hour his admirers gave him a banquet. During the toasts one of them, stirred by the spirit of the occasion, rose and enthusiastically called on the assembly to drink to the approaching day when carriages should travel at the speed of sixty miles an hour. Levassor turned to his nearest neighbor and asked in a quick undertone, "Why is it that after every banquet some people feel called on to make fools of themselves?"

IRON IN WATER.

It Takes Only the Least Little Bit to Make Itself Felt.

Half a part per million of iron in water is detectable by taste, and more than four or five parts makes water unpalatable. In some mineral springs iron is the constituent which imparts a medicinal value to the water, but ordinarily it is undesirable. More than 2.5 parts per million in water used for laundering makes a stain on the clothes. Iron must be removed from water from which ice is made or a cloudy, discolored product will result. An iron content of over two or three parts per million in water used in the manufacture of paper will stain the paper.

Iron is harmful in water used for steaming, for it is in equilibrium with acids which inside the boiler become dissociated, with the result that the free acids corrode the boiler plates, but the amount of iron carried in solution by most waters is so small that the damage it does to steam boilers generally amounts to little.

Waters having a high iron content have in some places, where they have been used as city supplies, caused an immense amount of trouble and expense, for they favor the growth of crenothrix to such a degree that the water pipes become clogged with the iron sheaths of that organism. The removal of iron from water is sometimes easy and sometimes very difficult.—United States Geological Survey.

Quits.

Little Maudie would tell "whoppers." One day her aunt thought she ought to be cured of this habit, so she spoke seriously to the little maid, who promised to mend her ways.

To point the moral auntie told the tale of the shepherd boy who was always calling "Wolf!" until no one could believe him. Then one day the wolf really came and ate up all the sheep.

"All the sheep?" interrupted Maudie.

"Yes, every one of them," replied auntie decidedly.

"Every single one?"

Auntie nodded.

"Well," said Maudie slowly, "I don't believe you, and you don't believe me. So there!"—London Answers.

Food For Punsters.

"I don't see how Fussleigh gets any enjoyment out of his food. He's dieting, you know."

"Yes."

"He uses this new 'mathematical masticatory' system."

"Good gracious, what's that? So many chews to the mouthful?"

"No. He eats beans by the dozen, rice by the grain, fish by the perch and spaghetti by the yard."

"Does he seem better?"

"Measurably so." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Drink Plenty of Water.

A Roumanian scientist claims that any one can live to be 100 years old, barring accidents, if he drinks enough water. He declares he has discovered that old age is due to a decrease in the amount of water in the system and that Father Time may be checkmated by systematic water drinking during middle age.

Buying Wives.

Wives are still obtained by purchase in some parts of Russia. In the district of Kamyshin, on the Volga, this is practically the only way in which marriages are brought about. The price of a pretty girl from a well to do family ranges from $100 to $200.

Same Way.

"How did you find dear old Broadway?"

"That way yet."

"What way?"

"Old and dear."—Cleveland Leader.

Be satisfied with success in even the smallest matter and think that even such a result is no trifle.—Marcus Aurelius.

BOUNTIES ON SCALPS

Dr. Kalbfus Explains Operation of Recently Enacted Law.

Dr. Joseph Kalfus, Secretary of the State Game Commission, has prepared the following letter explaining the operation of the new law for the payment of bounties on scalps:

"Under the provisions of the act of April 15, 1915, affidivits necessary to the securing of bounties on noxious animals therein named may be made before a regular Game Protector, a Justice of the Peace, a Magistrate, or an Alderman.

"If the claim is presented to a game protector such an officer will examine the skin presented and take the affidavit of the applicant without any charge. If he finds the claim to be legitimate, he will split the face of the skin and return it to the claimant, and will forward the affidavit, with his certificate, to the Game Commission for payment.

"If the claim is presented to a Justice of the Peace, Magistrate or Alderman, such official will examine the skin to satisfy himself that the claim is legitimate, and will take the affidavit of the claimant on forms provided by the Game Commission. The claimant shall pay the official, other than a game protector, a fee of 25c, if but one animal is presented and named in such affidavit, and a fee of 50c if more than one animal, and not to exceed five, is named in such affidavit, after which such official will hand both the skin and the affidavit to the claimant, who will then forward same prepaid to the Game Commission, Bounty Division, Harrisburg, Pa. The law provides that no official other than a game protector shall in any way mutilate or split the face of the skin so presented, and no claim will be honored by the Game Commission if the face of the skin has been split before being sent to this office.

"The act of April 15, 1915, provides for a bounty of $6.00 on the wild cat, $2 00 on the fox, and $1.00 each on the Weasel and the mink.

"Blanks upon which to make claims for bounties may be secured by officials upon application to the Game Commission.

"The bounty bill of 1911, excluded the red fox, but the bill referred to in the above correspondence makes no distinction between the red and gray, and $2 is allowed for either."

The Gazette Times.

Since The Pittsburgh Gazette Times adopted its new "dress" coincidental with its entry into its new home, thus becoming the easy-to read newspaper, it has not stopped improving. It has been publishing some of the most entertaining and instructive features ever presented by a newspaper. The women's page, the financial section, the editorial page all stand out boldly, a relief to the eyes of all readers. The sporting section has grown to be the largest, as it always has been the best. Grantland Rice has been added to the list of special writers and his gingery stuff is a delight to all the fans. Sporting pages, like market pages, usually are unattractive enough, but not so in The Gazette Times. The news is there and sidelights—all shining forth in the most inviting style. The Gazette Times has the most complete facilities for covering the news of the world, and it does it in altogether satisfactory manner.

INVENTIONS WE NEED.

Plenty of Opportunities For Would Be and Could Be Edisons.

The world is full of would be Edisons, and the point we want to bring out is that quite a lot of them are could be Edisons.

A man invented the stocking frame for weaving silk stockings. He got the idea while he sat watching his wife work. But surely he wasn't the first man who sat and watched his wife work.

There is a huge fortune for the man who can commercialize weeds. The raw material is inexhaustible, for it renews itself automatically every year. It might pay a reader in the paper making trade to follow up this idea.

Then we want a paint that will last as long as the material upon which it is placed and an iron that won't rust. We want something that will counteract the wearing effect of the atmosphere. It's going to be invented some day, and it may as well be done now, and you who read this may as well be the person to do it.

In some remote corner of the earth today a could be Edison may be experimenting with the possibilities of cities on the sea. There are millions of square miles of water that are more or less wasted, and sooner or later, as the land area of the earth becomes crowded, people will inevitably take to cities on the sea.

Above all, keep your eyes on Nature, who is continually making inventions which she never protects with patents. —Stray Stories.

FREE FALLING.

Just Collapse, Drop Limply and You May Escape Serious Injury.

It was stated in a description of a recent aeroplane mishap that the aviator had time to clamber to the upper struts of his machine and that when the crash came he was practically unhurt, the landing wheels and lower part of the machine receiving and absorbing the shock.

Flying men, too, in the early days of aviation frequently leaped from falling machines and escaped with minor injuries. There is a knack in leaping and an art in falling, and athletes and aviators know both. It is to "fall free" and to offer no resistance or as little as possible.

It is not Providence that specially guards drunken men and little children when they topple. They collapse, and as the muscles and sinews are not drawn taut and no resistance offered, but little damage and frequently none results. The bone of a limp arm would need some force to be applied before it broke. A "resisting" arm would snap almost at once. In a fall all attempts to recover one's balance, if unsuccessful, mean greater damage. Let yourself collapse—fall limply—and you may escape serious injuries. It is the strain and wrench on muscles and sinews which make the bones snap.

Fall anyhow. Don't try to save yourself—and you will.—London Answers.

Never Had 'Em.

Old Dick was an old plantation darkey. He was rarely if ever sick, and he always claimed that it was the way he had lived. One day as he was walking down the street a local merchant, taking advantage of his ignorance, accosted him thus:

"Dick, one of your best friends has just told me that you have ancestors of the worst sort."

"Now, look heah, Cap'n Gawg, I doan want to hurt nobody, but I jes' want to know who dat man was wot tol' you, and I sho will go after him, 'cause he done gone and 'sult me. Me got ancestors? Why, cap'n, that's as big a lie as was eber told. I neber had nothin' in my life but the mumps and colic."—National Monthly.

The Telephone Pole.

The employer of a Polish girl who has learned quickly to speak English tells of her attempted mastery of the telephone. After its use was explained to her she was eager to answer every call. A ring came and she jumped to the phone.

"Hello," came from the receiver.

"Hello," answered the girl, flushed with pride at being able to give the proper answer.

"Who is this?" continued the voice.

"I don't know," exclaimed the maid. "I can't see you."—Philadelphia Ledger.

World's Longest Street.

In Seebohm's "Siberia In Asia" is thus described what is called the longest street in the world: "Siberia was half jestingly described to me as a big village, the main street of which, extending from Nishni-Novgorod to Kiakh-ta, was about 5,000 miles long, where there were always half a million horses on the road and where everybody knew everybody from one end of the street to the other."

INSIDE A VOLCANO

Looking Down Into Kilauea's Lake of Boiling Lava.

LIKE A PIT OF LIQUID FIRE.

A Play of Flaming Colors So Dazzling In the Darkness of the Vast Crater That It Terrifies the Spectator—A Veritable Fountain of Fire.

According to all the rules of school geographies, a volcano ought to be situated on top of a mountain; it ought to throw out stones and ashes and molten lava; its crater should be in the shape of an inverted cone, and should emit terrifying noises; periodically it should overwhelm a village or two. Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii, conforms to none of these specifications. It has thrown out neither stones nor ashes since it annihilated the army that was marching against Kamehameha, almost a hundred and fifty years ago. It retains its lava within its own crater, which is not shaped like an inverted cone. The sides are from 100 to 700 feet high and 7.85 miles in circumference, and the floor covers 2,650 acres. The volcano seldom makes terrifying noises—at least of the kind heard in imagination by a schoolboy. Thousands of people descend into the crater annually, and not one has ever been injured.

The walk across the floor of the crater, about two and one-half miles, is over a hard lava bed, more or less up and down, since lava hardens quickly and remains as it flowed, in great ropes and ripples. A few yards from shore—one comes naturally to call the bank "shore"—a ragged crack is crossed by a wooden bridge. At the time this crack opened, a large party was in the crater. They stayed long because they were delighted with the unusual activity of the lake and had no idea that this activity extended beyond the pit of fire until at last they started to go back to the hotel.

It was night, and as they approached the northern bank of the crater their lanterns suddenly revealed a huge fissure directly across their path. Already molten lava was bubbling up at the bottom. They followed the edge of the crack, keenly conscious, undoubtedly, as they turned to keep parallel with the crater wall, that they were on the inner edge. At last they found a spot where the lava had split unevenly, leaving a projecting ledge on which it was possible to stand, and so to jump to the other side. The whole experience, with the thought of sinking to the fires beneath or of being overwhelmed by the lava slowly rising in the fissure and the utter helplessness of their situation, was enough to test the most fearless.

Kilauea is really an enormous quiescent crater with an active inner pit. This cavity is, perhaps, 1,000 feet across, and its precipitous sides lead down to a lake of molten lava several acres in extent, sometimes higher, sometimes lower in the pit. This is Halemaumau, which is commonly translated (although incorrectly), "the house of everlasting fire." It is certainly the house of the goddess Pele.

By daylight the lake of fire is a greenish yellow, cut with ragged cracks of red that look like pale streaks of stationary lightning across its surface. It is restless, breathing rapidly, bubbling up at one point and sinking down at another; throwing up sudden fountains of scarlet molten lava that play a few minutes and subside, leaving shimmering mounds that gradually settle to the level surface of the lake, turning brown and yellow as they sink. As darkness comes, the colors on the lake grow so intense that they almost hurt the eyes. The fire is not only red; it is blue and purple and orange and green. Blue flames shimmer and dart about the edges of the pit, back and forth across the surface of the restless mass. Sudden fountains paint blood red the great plume of sulphur smoke that rises constantly.

Sometimes the spurts of lava are so violent, so exaggerated by the night, that one draws back terrified lest some atom of their molten substance should spatter over the edge of the precipice. Sometimes the whole lake is in motion. Waves of fire toss and battle with each other and dash in clouds of bright vermilion spray against the black sides of the pit. Sometimes one of these sides falls in with a roar that echoes back and forth, and mighty rocks are swallowed in the liquid mass of fire that closes over them in a whirlpool, like water over a s

BE HONEST AND LOYAL

Loyalty is one of the greatest assets in every successful organization. It is the common-place of military history that servile troops cannot with-stand half their number of devoted patriots. And the truth is illustrated again in the history of great business enterprises. Leadership, of course, is always essential. What every great leader is invariably seeking is the man who can give him loyal service. The greatest leader is the man who can find the men who will serve him with unselfish zeal and absolute loyalty. The greatest factor in the success of Andrew Carnegie was his ability to pick out young men who would carry on the work he had in hand, men of energy and ability and of unquestioned loyalty to him and his varied enterprises.

In all great organizations the heads of departments must command the confidence and respect of their chief. It is no less true down through all the ranks of the workers. And yet this condition is one which again and again is overlooked by the young man starting out on the voyage of life. Many a young man at his desk or the bench or behind the counter does his work unwillingly, gives as little as he can, never goes out of his way to advance the interests of his employer and comes as near shirking as he can when any extra work is asked of him. And yet such a one possibly wonders why he is making such slow progress.

Watch the man who is pushing to the top. You may see that he has some exceptional qualities—energy, forcefulness, brains—some unusual ability. But, whether he has these or not, you will surely see that he shows the spirit of loyalty. He identifies himself with the concern for which he works. He gives it the best there is in him; he does more work than he is paid for; he has the interest of his employer at heart and goes out of his way to advance it. Sooner or later such a man will get his reward. It may not materialize in a day or a year, but it will surely, eventually come. The dependable man is the one who is in demand. Personal character is a man's choicest asset. There are higher reasons why every man would give the best he has, but even in dollars and cents it is worth while to prove one's integrity and strict devotion to duty. It pays to be honest and loyal.

AMERICAN RIGHTS AT SEA

The more the President's note to Germany is studied the clearer it is seen that we have here the enunciation of a great principle. It is not for today or tomorrow but for all time. "American citizens", the President declares, "ac within their indisputable rights in taking their ships and traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas and exercise those rights in what should be well justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligations and certainly in the confidence that their own Government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights."

Some loyal Americans have labored under the impression that we had no rights at sea which warring Powers were bound to respect. That sentence alone in the President's note is enough to set them right. And it might well stand as a permanent expression of rights upon which we have always insisted and what our self-respect as a nation compels us now to maintain.

There is no reason why the world should be surprised if Japan attempts to take over control of China's affairs. The amount of Christian charity now being exhibited by the enlightened nations of Europe is not sufficient to serve as a rebuke to any little job of brigandage such as the Japs have in mind. The greatest conflict in history leaves the European Powers in no position to exert pressure upon Japan. The United States might protest against the attempt to reduce China to the condition of a vassal to Japan, but our protest could not be backed up by an attempt at physical restraint. What England can do to restrain her eastern ally remains to be seen. Japanese statesmen must recognize that such a chance as this for unrestricted action will probably not be offered again. Convulsed with war, China cannot be counted on to remain forever powerless. If Japan is determined to go into China, Japan will probably go.

Restraint never worries a man who can restrain himself.

STAND BY THE PRESIDENT

It is imperative that all loyal and patriotic Americans give their support to the President in his present unenviable position, one brought about by conditions which are not of his creation. Not since the dark days of the Civil War has this country been confronted by a situation of such gravity as faces it now The sinking of the Maine brought war, but we knew the weakness of Spain, and the conflict at no time seriously threatened the vital interests of this county.

Today almost the entire civilized world is at war. No one can foresee the outcome. If we are drawn into this conflict, we cannot hope to escape without the inevitable price, but if war is forced upon us we shall not hesitate to pay that price.

We want peace, not because we fear the cost of war but because we abhor the niquity of such a struggle as the nations of the world are now waging. We shall seek peace. By every possible means, short of sacrificing our honor and our rights as a nation, we shall endeavor to adjust the conflict of our interests with the policy adopted by Germany. If war comes to us, it will not be one of our seeking since we are at peace with the whole world. There will be days, they may be weeks, of doubt and uncertainty before this tremendous issue can be settled, before the momentous question of peace or war can be finally determined. Our duty as a people is plain. This is a time for sober thought. It is a time for putting aside petty disputes on party matters. Political policies can wait. A greater question than any of these confronts us. And on that question all Americans, wherever born, or of whatever race or creed or party, must and will unite on the common ground of loyal citizenship. The eyes of all these turn toward the President. We, all of us, have confidence in his wisdom, his patience and his courage, and back of these is our prayer that he may have Divine guidance. In his recent speech at Philadelphia he set before us the ideals we must uphold if we would be true to the spirit of America. To a certain extent he must stand alone. If that comes which we all devoutly hope may not come, President Wilson will be called upon to bear a burden of responsibility which has been laid upon no President since Lincoln.

And now in this period of doubt and uncertainty, when any day may see us forced into a position where peace can no longer be hoped for, it is our duty as citizens to refrain from thoughtless criticism of the Administration, to curb our impatience, and to show him and the world that we stand united as a people in support of our President.

When trouble is coming, you can get all you want without hunting for it.

If the Colonel really wants to fight, it would be advisable for him to wait till the fighting starts.

If you can't keep neutral, and if you feel like engaging in a scrap, the season is due when you can swat the fly.

Even the opponents of the Governor must admit that with the appropriation bills before him he is cutting quite a figure.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS

Any Person Over Ten Years Old May be Depositor After July 1st.

Every person in the United States ten years old or over may open an account in a postal savings bank after July 1st, according to an instructive leaflet on the Postal Savings System just issued by Postmaster General Burleson. This important extension of the service will be made possible by permitting persons living in communities so sparsely settled as not to justify the designation of their local post offices as regular postal savings banks to open accounts by mail.

Governor Dockery, Third Assistant Postmaster General, who has direct supervision of postal savings, was so impressed by appeals from all over the country to open postal savings accounts by mail that he took up the task some weeks ago of working out a feasible and safe method for meeting a demand well illustrated in a letter from a Saline County Missourian, who resides many miles from a postal savings bank.

"Having a few hundred dollars saved from fifty years of hard and assiduous labor and skimping economy on the part of my wife and myself, we concluded to deposit it in the Postal Savings Bank of ——. We wrote to the postmaster at that place and received reply to the effect that none but patrons of that office could deposit in that office which is very disappointing news to us. Our little farm is not large enough to support us and land is so high that it is impossible for us to buy more with what little we have saved and we are so old that we can't labor much now and we would be so glad to lay by at least enough to put us away in decency."

Under the plan adopted by the Postmaster General for opening accounts by mail an intending depositor, residing where there is no regularly designated postal savings bank, will apply to his local postmaster who will see that necessary identification data is prepared and forwarded to a nearby post office authorized to accept deposits. The intending depositor will then be given permission to forward his first and subsequent deposits by money order or registered mail direct to the postmaster at the banking point for which receipts or certificates will be issued. He may withdraw all or any part of his postal savings by mail and on demand together with any interest that may be due him.

The new leaflet points out that any person ten years old or over may open an account in his or her own name; that an account may be opened by a married woman free from any control or interference by her husband; that post office officials are forbidden to disclose to any person, except the depositor, the amount of any deposits; that withdrawals may be made without previous notice; and that the Government guarantees to repay all deposits on demand with accrued interest.

The leaflet will soon be printed in 22 foreign languages for distribution through local post offices. The foreign-born citizen has taken very kindly to postal savings, and literature in his own language will be of great assistance to him. In a recent article, Postmaster General Burleson commented on the foreign-born depositor as follows:

"Upwards of 500,000 depositors now have accounts in the Postal Savings System and they represent every nationality on the earth. They also represent almost every known occupation—professional men, theatrical people, mechanics laborers, fishermen, pack peddlers, etc. But the majority are wage-earners, and of this class the foreign-born largely predominate. A census of depositors taken by the Post Office Department shows that approximately 40 per cent (200,000) of the depositors are foreign born citizens and they own more than 50 per cent of the deposits—splendid evidence of the confidence of our newly acquired citizens in the ability and good faith of their adopted country to fulfill its obligations.

"There is another reason which led immigrants, unfamiliar with our language and business methods, to turn to the Government to safeguard their humble savings and that reason is the disastrous experiences many of them have had by the failures of bogus "private banks" officered by swindlers of their own tongue who have preyed mercilessly upon their loneliness and credulity."

Postal savings receipts have broken all records the past year. During the eight months prior to April 1st there was a net gain in deposits of $19,000,000, as against a gain of $8,000,000 for the same months the year before. Thousands of new accounts have been opened and the millions made up largely of hidden savings have been turned back into the channels of trade just at a time when there was pressing demand for every dollar.

E. Griest they were organized as an auxiliary of the Bellefonte society with ten charter members. Miss Marie Griest was chosen president and Miss May Shipley secretary.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

By ARTHUR B. REEVE
The Well-Known Novelist and the Creator of the "Craig Kennedy" Stories

Presented in Collaboration With the Pathe Players and the Eclectic Film Company

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. All Foreign Rights Reserved.

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders and other crimes. The principal clue to the criminal is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, employs Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend Jameson, a newspaper man. Enraged at the determined effort which Elaine and Craig Kennedy are making to put an end to his crimes, the Clutching Hand, as this strange criminal is known, resorts to all sorts of the most diabolical schemes to put them out of the way. Each chapter of the story tells of a new plot against their lives and of the way the great detective uses all his skill to save this pretty girl and himself from death.

ELEVENTH EPISODE

THE HOUR OF THREE.

With the ominous forefinger of his Clutching Hand extended, the Master Criminal emphasized his instructions to his minions.

"Perry Bennett, her lawyer, is in favor again with Elaine Dodge," he was saying. "She and Kennedy are on the outs even yet. But they may become reconciled. Then she'll have that fellow on our trail again. Before that happens we must 'get' her—see?"

It was in the latest headquarters to which Craig had chased the criminal, in one of the toughest parts of New York's great river front section.

"Now," went on the Clutching Hand, "I want you, Slim, to follow them. See what they do—where they go. It's her birthday. Something's bound to occur that will give you a lead. All you've got to do is to use your head. Get me?"

* * * * * * * *

It was, as Clutching Hand had said, Elaine's birthday. She had received many callers and congratulations, innumerable costly and beautiful tokens of remembrance from her countless friends and admirers. In the conservatory of the Dodge house Elaine, Aunt Josephine and Susie Martin were sitting discussing not only the happy occasion, but more, the many strange events of the past few weeks.

"Well, said a familiar voice behind them, "what would a certain blonde young lady accept as a birthday present from her family lawyer?"

All three turned in surprise.

"Oh, Mr. Bennett," cried Elaine. "How you startled us!"

Elaine hesitated. She was thinking not so much of his words as of Kennedy. To them all, however, it seemed that she was unable to make up her mind what, in the wealth of her luxury, what she would like.

Susie Martin had been wondering whether, now that Bennett was here, she was not de trop, as she looked, at her wrist watch mechanically. As she did so, an idea occurred to her.

"Why not one of these?" she cried impulsively, indicating the watch. "Father has some beauties at the shop."

"Oh, good," exclaimed Elaine, "how sweet!"

"Then let's all go to the shop," said Bennett. "Miss Martin will personally conduct the tour, and we shall have our pick of the finest stock."

It was too gay a party to notice a sinister figure following them in a cab.

Chatting with animation, the three moved over to the watch counter, while the crook, with a determination not to risk missing anything, entered the shop door, too.

"Mr. Thomas," asked Susie as her father's clerk bowed to them, "please show Miss Dodge the wrist watches father was telling about."

Unobserved, the crook walked over near enough to hear what was going on.

At last, with much banter and yet care, Elaine selected one that was indeed a beauty and was about to snap it on her dainty wrist when the clerk interrupted.

"I beg your pardon," he suggested, "but I'd advise you to leave it to be regulated, if you please."

Reluctantly Elaine handed it over to the clerk.

A moment later they went out and entered the car again.

As they did so, Slim, who had been looking over various things in the next case as if undecided, came up to the watch counter.

"I'm making a present," he remarked confidentally to the clerk. "How about those bracelet watches?"

The clerk pulled out some of the cheaper ones.

"No," he said thoughtfully, pointing out a tray in the showcase, "something like those."

He ended by picking out one identically like that which Elaine had selected, and started to pay for it.

"Better have it regulated," repeated the clerk.

"No," he objected hastily, shaking his head and paying the money quickly. "It's a present—and I want it tonight."

He took the watch and left the store hurriedly.

In the laboratory, Kennedy was working over an oblong oak box, perhaps eighteen inches in length and half as high. In the box I could see, besides other apparatus, two good sized spools of fine wire.

"What's all that?" I asked inquisitively.

"Another of the new instruments that scientific detectives use," he responded, scarcely looking up, "a little magnetic wizard, the telegraphone."

"Which is?" I prompted.

"Something we detectives might use to take down and 'can' telephone conversations and other such conversations. When it is attached properly to a telephone, it records everything that is said over the wire. The record is not made mechanically on a cylinder, but electro-magnetically on this wire."

Craig continued to tinker tantalizingly with the machine which had been invented by a Dane, Valdemar Poulsen.

He had scarcely finished testing the telegraphone when the laboratory door opened and a clean-cut young man entered.

Kennedy, I knew, had found that the routine work of the Clutching Hand case was beyond his limited time and had retained this young man, Raymond Chase, to attend to that.

Just now what worried Craig was the situation with Elaine, and I fancied that he had given Chase some commission in connection with that.

"I've got it, Mr. Kennedy," greeted Chase with quiet modesty.

"Good," responded Craig heartily. "I knew you would."

"Got what?" I asked a moment later.

Kennedy nodded for Chase to answer.

"I've located the new residence of Flirty Florrie," he replied.

I saw what Kennedy was after at once. Flirty Florrie and Dan the Dude had caused the quarrel between himself and Elaine. Dan the Dude was dead. But Flirty Florrie might be forced to explain it.

"That's fine," he added, exultingly. "Now I'll clear that thing up."

He took a hasty step to the telephone, put his hand on the receiver and was about to take it off the hook. Then he paused, and I saw his face working.

Finally his pride, for Kennedy's was a highly sensitive nature, got the better of him.

"No," he said, half to himself, "not—yet."

* * * * * * * *

Elaine had returned home.

Alone, her thoughts naturally went back to what had happened recently to interrupt a friendship which had been the sweetest in her life.

"There must be some mistake," she murmured pensively to herself, thinking of the photograph Flirty had given her. "Oh, why did I send him away? Why didn't I believe him?"

Mechanically, she put out her hand to the telephone.

She was about to take off the receiver, when something seemed to stay her hand. She wanted him to come to her.

* * * * * * * *

Craig's eye fell on the telegraphone, and an idea seemed to occur to him.

"Walter, you and Chase bring that thing along," he said a moment later.

At last we came to the apartment house at which Chase had located the woman.

"Now, Chase," he directed, "you needn't go in with us. Walter and I can manage this now. But don't get out of touch with me. I shall need you any moment—certainly, tomorrow."

Kennedy slipped on a badge inscribed: "Telephone inspector."

"Walter," he smiled, "you're elected my helper."

We entered the apartment house hall and found a negro boy in charge of the switchboard.

"You look over the switchboard, Kelly," he winked at me, "while I test out the connections back here. There must be something wrong with the wires or there wouldn't be so many complaints."

He had gone back to the switchboard while the negro, still unsuspicious, watched without understanding what it was all about.

"I don't know," Craig muttered finally for the benefit of the boy, "but I think I'll have to leave that tester, after all. Say, if I put it here, you'll have to be careful not to let anyone meddle with it. If you do, there'll be the deuce to pay. See?"

Kennedy had already started to fasten the telegraphone to the wires he had selected from the tangle.

At last he finished and stood up.

"Don't disturb it and don't let anyone else touch it," he ordered. "Better not tell anyone—that's the best way. I'll be back for it tomorrow, probably."

"Yas, sah," nodded the boy, with a bow, as he went out.

* * * * * * * *

Back in the new hang-out, the Clutching Hand was laying down the law to his lieutenants and heelers, when Slim at last entered.

"Huh!" growled the master criminal, conveying the fact that he was considerably relieved to see him at last. "Where have you been? I've been off on a little job myself, and got back."

Slim apologized profusely.

"Yes, sir," he replied hastily, "well, I went over to the Dodge house, and I saw them finally. I followed them into a jewelry shop. That lawyer bought a wrist watch. So I bought one just like it. I thought perhaps we could—"

"Give it to me," growled Clutching Hand, seizing it the moment Slim displayed it. "And don't butt in—see?"

From the capacious desk the master criminal pulled a set of small drills, vises, and other jeweler's tools and placed them on the table.

"All right," he relented. "Now, do you see what I have just thought of—no? This is just the chance. Look at me."

Carefully he plied his hands to the job, regardless of time.

"There," he exclaimed at last, holding the watch where they could all see it. "See!"

He pulled out the stem to set the hands and slowly twisted it between his thumb and finger. He turned the hands until they were almost at the point of three o'clock.

Then he held the watch out where all could see.

As the minute hand touched three, from the back of the case, as if from the chasing itself, a little needle, perhaps a quarter of an inch, jumped out. It seemed to come from what looked like merely a small insect in the decoration.

"You see what will happen at the hour of three?" he asked.

No one said a word, as he held up a vial which he had drawn from his pocket. On it they could read the label, "Ricinus."

"One of the most powerful poisons in the world," he exclaimed. "Enough to kill a regiment!"

They fairly gasped and looked at it with horror, exchanging glances.

Opening the vial carefully, he dipped in a thin piece of glass and placed a tiny drop in a receptacle back of the needle and on the needle itself.

"I've set my invention to go off at three o'clock," he concluded. "Tomorrow forenoon, it will have to be delivered early—and I don't believe we shall be troubled any longer by Miss Elaine Dodge," he added, venomously.

Calmly he wrapped up the apparently innocent engine of destruction and handed it to Slim.

"See that she gets it in time," he said merely.

"I will, sir," answered Slim, taking it gingerly.

* * * * * * * *

Flirty Florrie had returned that afternoon, late, from some expedition on which she had been sent.

Rankling in her heart yet was the death of her lover, Dan the Dude.

Thus, when she arrived home, she went to the telephone to report and called a number, 4494 Greenwich.

"Hello, chief," she repeated. "This is Flirty. Have you done anything yet in the little matter we talked about?"

"Say—be careful of names—over the wire," came a growl.

"You know—what I mean."

"Yes. The trick will be pulled off at three o'clock."

"Good!" she exclaimed. "Good-by and thank you."

With his well-known caution Clutching Hand did not even betray names over the telephone if he could help it.

Flirty hung up the receiver with satisfaction. The manes of the departed Dan might soon rest in peace!

* * * * * * * *

The next day, early in the forenoon, a young man with a small package carefully done up came to the Dodge house.

"From Martin's, the jeweler's, for Miss Dodge," he said to Jennings at the door.

Elaine and Aunt Josephine were sitting in the library when Jennings announced him.

"Oh, it's my watch," cried Elaine. "Show him in."

Elaine put the watch on her wrist and admired it.

"Is it all right?" asked Slim.

"Yes, yes," answered Elaine. "You may go."

* * * * * * * *

Early the same morning Kennedy went around again to the apartment house and, cautious not to be seen by Flirty, recovered the telegraphone. Together we carried it to the laboratory.

There he set up a little instrument that looked like a wedge sitting up on end, in the face of which was a dial. Through it he began to run the wire from the spools, and, taking an earpiece, put another on my head over my ears.

He turned a switch and we listened eagerly.

First came several calls from people with bills, and she put them off most adroitly.

Then we heard a call that caused Kennedy to look at me quickly, stop the machine and start at that point over again.

"That's what I wanted," he said, as we listened in:

"Give me 4494 Greenwich."

"Hello."

"Hello, chief. This is Flirty. Have you done anything yet in the little matter we talked about?"

"Say—be careful of names—over the wire."

"You know—what I mean."

"Yes, the trick will be pulled off at three o'clock."

"Good! Good-by, and thank you!"

"Good-by."

Craig paused and considered a minute, then moved to the telephone.

"There's only one thing to do, and that's to follow out my original scheme," he said energetically. "Information, please."

"Where is Greenwich 4494?" he asked a moment later.

The minutes passed. "Thank you, sir," he cried, writing down on a pad an address on the West side, near the river front. Then turning to me, he exclaimed, "Walter, we've got him at last!"

Craig rose and put on his hat and coat thrusting a pair of opera glasses into his pocket, in case we should want to observe the place at a distance. I followed him excitedly. The trail was hot.

* * * * * * * *

Kennedy and I came at last to the place on the West side where the crooked streets curved off.

Instead of keeping on until he came to the place we sought, he turned off and quickly slipped behind the shelter of a fence. There was a broken board in the fence and he bent down, gazing through with the opera glasses.

Across the lot was the new hang-out, a somewhat dilapidated, old-fashioned brick house of several generations back. Through the glass we could see an evil-countenanced crook slinking along. He mounted the steps and rang the bell, turning as he waited.

From a small aperture in the doorway looked out another face, equally evil. Under cover, the crook made the sign of the Clutching Hand twice and was admitted.

"That's the place, all right," whispered Kennedy with satisfaction. He hurried to a telephone booth, where he called several numbers. Then we returned to the laboratory.

From the table he picked up a small coil over which I had seen him working and attached it to the bell and some batteries. He replaced it on the table, while I watched curiously.

"A selenium cell," he explained. "Only when light falls on it does it become a good conductor of electricity. Then the bell will ring."

Just before making the connection he placed his hat over the cell. Then he lifted the hat. The light fell on it and the bell rang. He replaced the hat and the bell stopped.

Just then there came a knock at the door. I opened it.

"Hello, Chase," greeted Kennedy. "Well, I've found the new headquarters all right—over on the West side."

Kennedy picked up the selenium cell and a long coil of fine wire, which he placed in a bag. Then he took another bag already packed, and, shifting them between us, we hurried downtown.

Near the vacant lot, back of the new headquarters, was an old broken-down house. Through the rear of it we entered.

I started back in astonishment as we entered and found eight or ten policemen already there. Kennedy had ordered them to be ready for a raid, and they had dropped in one at a time without attracting attention.

"Well, men," he greeted them, "I see you found the place all right. Now, in a little while Jameson will return with two wires. Attach them to the bell which I will leave here. When it rings, raid the house. Jameson will lead you to it. Come, Walter," he added, picking up the bags.

* * * * * * * *

Ten minutes later, outside the new headquarters, a crouched-up figure, carrying a small package, his face hidden under his soft hat and upturned collar, could have been seen slinking along until he came to the steps.

He went up and peered through the aperture of the doorway. Then he rang the bell. Twice he raised his hand and clenched it in the now familiar clutch.

A crook inside saw it through the aperture and opened the door. The figure entered and almost before the door was shut tied the masking handkerchief over his face, which hid his identity from even the most trusted lieutenants. The crook bowed to the chief, who, with a growl as though of recognition, moved down the hall.

As he came to the room from which Slim had been sent on his mission, the same group was seated in the thick tobacco smoke.

"You fellows clear out," he growled. "I want to be alone."

"The old man is peeved," muttered one, outside, as they left.

The weird figure gazed about the room to be sure that he was alone.

* * * * * * * *

When Craig and I left the police he had given me most minute instructions which I was now following out to the letter.

"I want you to hide there," he said, indicating a barrel back of the house next to the hangout. "When you see a wire come down from the headquarters, take it and carry it across the lot to the old house. Attach it to the bell; then wait. When it rings, raid the Clutching Hand joint."

I waited what seemed to be an interminable time back of the barrel. Finally, however, I saw a coil of fine wire drop rapidly to the ground from a window somewhere above. I made a dash for it, as though I were trying to reach the trenches, seized my prize and, without looking back to see where it came from, beat a hasty retreat.

Around the lot I skirted, until at last I reached the place where the police were waiting. Quickly we fastened the wire to the bell.

We waited.

Not a sound from the bell.

* * * * * * * *

Up in the room in the joint the hunched-up figure stood by the table. He had taken his hat off and placed it carefully on the table and was now waiting.

Suddenly a noise at the door startled him. He listened. Then he backed away from the door and drew a revolver.

As the door slowly opened there entered another figure, hat over his eyes, collar up, a handkerchief over his face, the exact counterpart of the first!

For a moment each glared at the other.

"Hands up!" shouted the first figure, hoarsely, moving the gun and closing the door with his foot.

The newcomer slowly raised his crooked hand over his head, as the blue steel revolver gaped menacingly.

With a quick movement of the other hand the first sinister figure removed the handkerchief from his face and straightened up.

It was Kennedy!

"Come over to the center of the room," ordered Kennedy.

Clutching Hand obeyed, eyeing his captor closely.

"Now lay your weapons on the table."

He tossed down a revolver.

The two still faced each other.

"Take off that handkerchief!"

It was a tense moment. Slowly Clutching Hand started to obey. Then he stopped. Kennedy was just about to thunder, "Go on," when the criminal calmly remarked, "You've got ME all right, Kennedy, but in twenty minutes Elaine Dodge will be dead!"

He said it with a nonchalance that might have deceived anyone less astute than Kennedy. Suddenly there flashed over Craig the words: "THE TRICK WILL BE PULLED OFF AT THREE O'CLOCK!"

There was no fake about that. Kennedy frowned menacingly. If he killed Clutching Hand, Elaine would die. If he fought he must either kill or be killed. If he handed Clutching Hand over Elaine was lost. He looked at his watch. It was twenty-five minutes of three.

"What do you mean—tell me?" demanded Kennedy with forced calm.

"Yesterday Mr. Bennett bought a wrist watch for Elaine," the Clutching Hand said quietly. "They left it to be regulated. One of my men bought one just like it. Mine was delivered to her today."

"A likely story!" doubted Kennedy.

For answer the Clutching Hand merely pointed to the telephone.

Kennedy reached for it.

"One thing," interrupted the Clutching Hand. "You are a man of honor."

"Yes—yes. Go on."

"If I tell you what to do, you must promise to give me a fighting chance."

"Yes, yes."

"Call up Aunt Josephine, then. Do just as I say."

Covering Clutching Hand, Kennedy called a number. "This is Mr. Kennedy, Mrs. Dodge. Did Elaine receive a present of a wrist watch from Mr. Bennett?"

"Yes," she replied, "for her birthday. It came this forenoon."

Kennedy hung up the receiver and faced the Clutching Hand, puzzled as the latter said: "Call up Martin, the jeweler."

Again Kennedy obeyed.

"Has the watch purchased for Miss Elaine Dodge been delivered?" he asked the clerk.

"No," came back the reply, "the watch Mr. Bennett bought is still here being regulated."

Kennedy hung up the receiver. He was stunned.

"The watch will cause her death at three o'clock," said the Clutching Hand. "Swear to leave here without discovering my identity and I will tell you how. You can save her! In that watch," he hissed, "I have set a poisoned needle in a spring that will be released and will plunge it into her arm at exactly three o'clock. On the needle is ricinus!"

Craig advanced, furious. As he did so Clutching Hand pointed calmly to the clock. It was twenty minutes of three!

With a mental struggle Kennedy controlled his loathing of the creature before him.

"All right—but you'll hear from me—sooner than you suspect," he shouted, starting for the door.

Then he came back and lifted his hat, hiding as much as possible the selenium cell, letting the light fall on it.

"Only Elaine's life has saved you."

With a last threat he dashed out. He hailed a cab, returning from some steamship wharves not far away.

"Quick!" he ordered, giving the Dodge address on Fifth avenue.

Minute after minute the police and I waited. Was anything wrong? Where was Craig?

Just then a tremor grew into a tinkle, then came the strong burr of the bell. Kennedy needed us.

With a shout of encouragement to the men I dashed out and over to the old house.

Meanwhile Clutching Hand himself had approached the table to recover his weapon and had noticed the queer little selenium cell.

"The deuce!" he cried. "He's planned to get me anyhow!"

Clutching Hand rushed to the door—then stopped short. Outside he could hear the police and myself.

Clutching Hand slammed shut his door and pulled down over it a heavy wooden bar.

At the desk he paused and took out a piece of cardboard. Then, with a heavy black-marking pencil, he calmly printed on it, while we battered at the barricaded door, a few short feet away.

He laid the sign on the desk, then on another piece of cardboard, drew crudely a hand with the index finger pointing. This he placed on a chair, indicating the desk.

Just as the swaying and bulging door gave way, Clutching Hand gave the desk a pull. It opened up—his getaway.

He closed it with a sardonic smile in our direction, just as the door crashed in.

We looked about. There was not a soul in the room, nothing but the selenium cell, the chairs, the desk.

"Look!" I cried, catching sight of the index finger, and going over to the desk.

We rolled back the top. There on the flat top was a sign:

Dear Blockheads:
Kennedy and I couldn't wait.

Then came that mysterious sign of the Clutching Hand.

We hunted over the rooms, but could find nothing that showed a clue. Where was Clutching Hand? Where was Kennedy?

In the next house Clutching Hand had literally come out of an upright piano into the room corresponding to that he had left. Hastily he threw off his handkerchief, slouch hat, old coat and trousers. A neat striped pair of trousers replaced the old, frayed and baggy pair. A new shirt, then a sporty vest and a frock coat followed.

As he put the finishing touches on he looked for all the world like a be-whiskered foreigner.

At the door of the new headquarters, a few seconds later, I stood with the police.

"Not a sign of him anywhere," growled one of the officers.

* * * * * * * *

Elaine was sitting in the library reading when Aunt Josephine turned to her.

"What time is it, dear?" she asked.

Elaine glanced at her pretty new trinket.

"Nearly three, Auntie—just a couple of minutes," she said.

Just then there came the sound of feet running madly down the hallway. They jumped up, startled.

Kennedy, his coat flying and hat jammed over his eyes, had almost bowled over poor Jennings in his mad race down the hall.

"Well," demanded Elaine haughtily, "what's—"

Before she knew what was going on Craig hurried up to her and literally ripped the watch off her wrist, breaking the beautiful bracelet.

He held it up, gingerly. Elaine was speechless. Was this Kennedy? Was he possessed by such an inordinate jealousy of Bennett?

As he held the watch up, the second hand ticked around and the minute hand passed the meridian of the hour.

A viciously sharp needle gleamed out—then sprang back into the filigree work again.

"Well," she gasped again, "what's the meaning of this?"

Craig gazed at Elaine in silence.

Should he defend his rudeness, if she did not understand? She stamped her foot, and repeated the question a third time.

"What do you mean, sir, by such conduct?"

Slowly he bowed.

"I just don't like the kind of birthday presents you receive," he said, turning on his heel. "Good afternoon!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Pearl of the Crossroads

How She Met Her Fate.

By FREDERICK BRIGGS

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Some one said that a sailorman was good for nothing but to chase about the world and send people presents. Pearl Smith had known this all her life, though perhaps she had never resolved it into just that expression.

She drew the line at having more than one man on the same ship. Still, this was not at all inconvenient, for there were sometimes no less than fourteen men-of-war, besides a score of merchant ships, in the crossroads of the Pacific at one time.

The girl came by the prosaic name of Smith because her father's name had been something else in some other country. He came to Honolulu before the cable was in good working order and remained. Marrying a half caste Kanaka girl, he had kept a sailors' boarding house on King's road since Pearl was a baby. The presents had been coming in since the little girl was big enough to climb on a sailorman's knee, and their volume increased with her size. She was grown up at fourteen.

To see her then was like being wakened from a sweet sleep on a balmy afternoon by having great clusters of red, red roses pressed to one's cheeks. Young men dropping in at the Crossroads swore that they would never go to sea again, only to ship with the next tide for the Indian ocean in search of a pearl to match her skin.

She was like Honolulu days. The shimmering softness of her skin matched the warm afternoon skies. Rich reds of the island sunsets burned in her full, dimpled mouth. Tropic twilights lay behind her inky eyelashes, deepening to midnight in her long hair.

Men-of-war's men and merchant sailors sent different presents. The navy men leaned toward fancy jewelry and manicure sets, while the traders stuck to silk, uncut rubies, loose pearls, ivory fans and ostrich plumes.

This from the young men. To enumerate the junk that was dumped at the feet of this island goddess by silly old sea captains and others would be to copy the cargo bills of an East and West India tradesman. There would also be a list of small animals and birds, with a number of arctic treasures appended. Pearl kept what she fancied, and her father sold the rest.

As for a girl accepting presents from a dozen men at the same time, it must be remembered that Pearl lived neither east of Frisco nor west of Suez, which is only another way of saying that the girl was bred in a man's country, where anything a woman gets is so much for her gain and no less for her honor.

New admirers invariably meant more presents. But when a sailorman can jolly his superior officer and get anything he wants just for the asking women had better beware of him. When he stands six feet in his socks, laughs out of big blue eyes and conceals a cello note in a drawling voice so much the worse for the women. Heine—that was as far as they got with his name aboard ship, and it will suffice here—Heine was all of this and more. He was an American bluejacket, boatswain's mate of the destroyer Shark.

There is one amusement the Hawaiians have which Americans do not possess. We are enthusiastic surf bathers and are good swimmers, but a sight that is seen in Hawaiian waters is never seen on an American coast. A Hawaiian takes with him to the beach a board, usually about twice his length. This board he carries out as far as he can; then, placing himself on it, it bears him, forced by the waves, back again to the beach. Those who are not expert at this exercise may lie flat on the board, but those who are trained to it stand erect, balancing their bodies as they roll toward the shore.

He met Pearl at Waikiki beach. She was shooting the surf when Heine saw her first. Standing upright with outflung arms, she balanced on her polished board of kamani wood as it raced ahead of a giant breaker. Swift as the wave she flashed past the swimming sailor, but as the waters broke over his head he remembered every line of her beautiful body. The grace of her attitude struck him harder than the wave. Turning, he swam strongly toward the beach, where the spent roller had landed the fairy surf rider.

Half a dozen men were begging Pearl to be allowed to take her board out to the reef again, but she laughed them away with a flash of milk white teeth and struggled out alone. Heine met her a hundred fathoms from the beach, where the water came almost to his shoulders as he stood on the sand.

"I'll carry your board for you!" he cried as the girl broke through a wave almost upon him.

Startled, she turned her head, and the board slipped, striking on her flower mouth. As the blood came Heine caught her in his arms. The wave, receding, shut the other bathers from view, and for ten seconds the sailorman held the girl close to his heart.

"My lip will swell!" she panted, struggling to free herself.

But Heine jollied her, just as he jollied the commanding officer of the Shark, and within half an hour she had checked her surf board and bathing costume at the bathhouse and was riding back to town with him, holding her handkerchief to the swelling lip.

Three days later the fleet was ready to sail. Dusky singers with their tiny guitars strummed the sad "Aloha Oe"—"Farewell"—in every street. Pearl managed her other admirers so that Heine might have the last evening. When the time came for a final good-by Heine told her that he was coming back to Honolulu some day.

Pearl studied his face; then she pouted.

"That's what they all say!"

The sailor's eyes danced as he kissed her bruised mouth; then he was gone.

This time Pearl did not look for a present. She would have preferred the sailor back again. But the gift came. It was a brooch set with a genuine ruby. Heine bought the uncut stone from a lascar mess attendant. It cost him $65 to have it cut and polished, and the ruby was valuable.

"To match your lips—from Heine," was the word that came with the jewel.

Pearl's heart was filled with fear. Sailormen who sent presents never came back. Did she not have cream and rose pearls from the remittance man in Ceylon and a black diamond to rival her eyes? There was only one other man whom she had longed to see again—an English mate who sent her a perfect pair of pigeon blood rubies from Bombay. The jewels were torn from the eyes of a Hindu god, and the Hindus tore the mate's eyes from his head in revenge. But Pearl did not know this. She fastened Heine's gift on her bosom and put the other jewels away.

Heine was discharged from the naval service shortly after his visit to Hawaii, and, without informing Pearl, he returned to Honolulu. He had served a jeweler's apprenticeship before entering the navy and soon found employment in a local store as an engraver. He purchased a little bungalow in Kaiihi with the savings of his naval cruise and kept out of sight in Honolulu as much as possible, wishing to avoid meeting his sweetheart until he could surprise her with a complete arrangement for housekeeping.

One day as he bent over his engraving tools his heart gave a great bound as Pearl's voice floated through the lattice partition. She was talking with the jeweler in the front of the store. Peering through the slats, Heine saw a number of jewel boxes spread out on the counter between them. The jeweler was speaking:

"Do you get all these as presents, Miss Smith?"

"Oh, of course. The sailors—they are so good to me," she laughed. "But what are they worth—pins, brooches, rings, watches and all?"

The ex-sailor sank back, stunned. A look crept into his face that his commanding officer had seen when his boatswain's mate reported "both anchors carried away, sir," as the disabled Shark wallowed with the wind toward the thundering rocks of Cape Flattery. Heine had trusted his anchors. Now he thought of his early training—of his sisters and the girls back in the Kansas home—his standards of honor for women.

The jeweler was speaking again.

"I will allow you $220."

"Will that buy a very fine watch, with diamonds?" she asked.

"A very fine watch, but not with many diamonds," he replied.

"Then I'll wait. More will come," and she walked out.

The jeweler found his engraver sitting listlessly, with idle hands, and eyes that stared into space. He suspected the vitiating influence of the tropics.

"Go out and get a cool drink," he called cheerily. "Don't let the heat get away with you!"

Heine thanked his employer and went out. He had a cooling draft and was soon back at his bench. The next day he saw a real estate man and tried to sell his bungalow, as he intended to sail from Hawaii on the Mongolia, which was due, homeward bound, in two weeks.

A few days before the China mail came in Heine was startled again by his sweetheart's voice. He heard every word as she offered the pigeon blood rubies for sale. The jeweler was in ecstasies. The stones were flawless and perfectly matched. A deal was made for a beautiful diamond incrusted watch in exchange for a number of jewels, including the rubies.

Heine had never seen the girl more beautiful. Her face, shaded by a wide hat of delicate straw and rich flowers, seemed touched with the brush of melancholy. Her neck was bare, and the point of the low V of her white gown was secured by a ruby brooch—his ruby.

"I'll take this one," she was saying, "and you must cut these words in the heart."

She stood there gazing wistfully at the watch for a long time. When she had left the store the jeweler brought it back to his engraver.

"Get this out as soon as possible," he said, depositing the watch with the slip of words to be engraved.

Heine glanced at the slip. It read "To Heine—from Pearl."

Pushing back his stool, he sprang to his feet and faced the jeweler.

"I've been judging that little Kanaka girl all this time from a wrong standpoint!" he shouted; then, hatless and coatless, he dashed from the building.

"Heat's getting in its work," the jeweler mumbled to himself. "That's the trouble with these newcomers—can't stand the heat," and he shook his head sadly, for the newcomer was an excellent engraver, and he let the gin alone.

Heine overtook the girl in front of the Young hotel, and there, utterly oblivious of the staring public, he caught her again in his arms, kissing her perfect mouth, no longer bruised, but soft as a red hibiscus blossom.

SAUL'S LAST BATTLE.

2 Samuel 2-5.—May 23.

Distressed, He Asked Aid of the Witch of En-dor—Deceived by Evil Spirits. The Battle Lost—Saul and Jonathan Slain—The Song of the Bow, or Saul's Dead March—David King of Judah. Later, King of All Israel.

"Jehovah is my Strength and my Shield; my heart trusted in Him, and I am helped."—Psalm 28:7.

PERSECUTED and hunted by King Saul, no place was safe for David. The Philistines, desiring him for a friend rather than a foe, gave him and his followers the city of Ziglag. While residing there, David's conquests were over the Amalekites.

Meantime, the end of Saul's reign was nearing. A fresh Philistine invasion required all the army he could muster, and he felt very dubious respecting the results. Although, in harmony with the Divine regulation, he had ordered all who claimed to communicate with the dead to leave Israel, nevertheless some remained. In his extremity, King Saul visited the Witch of En-dor.

The witch got into communication with the fallen angels, who she supposed, as spiritualists still suppose, were the spirits of the dead. But the Bible assures us that "the dead know not anything." Samuel was sleeping with his fathers, awaiting the resurrection Morning. Then as now, evil spirits through mediums personated the dead and answered as instead of the dead. In this case, the answer was that on the next day the king and his sons would be defeated and slain.

David Inquiring of the Lord.

The Bible clearly teaches that the dead are dead and can give no information whatever; that they are simply in a state of suspended animation, awaiting the better Day when Messiah will bring the knowledge of God's glory to all, as the result of His Ransom-sacrifice at Calvary. The teaching that the dead are alive contradicts God's Word, and is the foundation of the grievous errors which have distressed Christians. None would pray for the dead or say masses for their release from Purgatory, if they knew that their dead were merely sleeping until the resurrection.

"The Song of the Bow."

When David heard of the defeat, his sympathy for Saul and Jonathan was expressed in a beautiful poem (2 Samuel 1:17-27). The Dead March from Saul is an attempt to put into modern music David's Song of the Bow.

In the battle Saul's sons were killed, including Jonathan. Saul himself was wounded. Fearing lest the Philistines would torture him to death, he finally suicided. A young Amalekite brought David the news, telling that he had dispatched King Saul at the latter's request—probably, however, manufacturing this part to bring honor to himself. But David commanded him to be put to death.

Realizing that the time had come to move from the Philistine country, David inquired of the Lord by the priest and the ephod. The answer was that he should go to Hebron, in Judea. Thither David and his companions removed with their families; and the tribe of Judah, his own tribe, promptly recognized him as their king. King Saul's son Ishbosheth had survived; and Abner, Saul's chief general, had him anointed king of Israel.

Finally Abner, angered with King Ishbosheth, proposed to become David's vassal. King David appreciated the proposition, doubtless considering it the Lord's will. However, the matter did not carry out; for Joab, David's nephew, slew Abner deceitfully. Instead of rejoicing in Abner's death, the king mourned for him and denounced his nephew's wrong course.

King of All Israel.

Shortly after this, others, misunderstanding King David, slew King Ishbosheth and brought his head to David, expecting to be rewarded. They also were condemned, and slain. All these things endeared the king to the people, who perceived that he was broad-minded and generous. He seems to have had a great appreciation of justice, and also a breadth of sympathy for his enemies.

David Anointed King.

Finally the other eleven tribes invited David to become king over all Israel. This was probably seventeen years after his anointing by Samuel. Faith and patience mark every step of those years, and reveal King David's character as we could not otherwise have known it. Its grandeur was chiefly manifested in his devotion to God and his submission to God's will.

Meantime King David had grown strong in conquering his enemies—the Lord's enemies. God had declared that the iniquity of the Amorites had come to the full, and that they should be destroyed. Whether destroyed in battle, by pestilence, famine or war, the Divine sentence must be carried out.

Those who died by Israel's sword will awake in the Millennial Kingdom. They will then be freed from ignorance and superstition, with Messiah's Kingdom ready to help them back to human perfection, lost in Eden, redeemed at Calvary.

The Fastest Colors.

It is said that the fastest colors on the market are what are known among dyers as hydrosulphite—colors that are dyed with hydrosulphite in a caustic bath. These colors are as nearly fast as any can be made and have been adopted by our government to be used in army uniforms.

The dyeing of these colors on cotton yarn is simple, especially when the Scotch tub system is employed. The proper way to dye these colors is to use the vacuum type of dye machine, as the dyestuff experts hold that all air should be eliminated from the cotton before the dyestuff is applied, and this type of machine is best suited for that purpose, because in this system the cotton is stationary and the dye liquor is forced through the cotton by means of pumps.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Traditions of Sandwich.

Sandwich is the hub of the universe—of golf. In times medieval it was one of England's five gates, through which passed heroes and saints, priests and kings. Here it was that King Arthur set out to play the emperor of Rome with Excalibur, and here on his return Guinevere welcomed him. St. Paul, says tradition, landed at Sandwich, but it is history that marks it as the landing place of St. Augustine. Picts and Scots were here beaten back by the army of the eastern Julian, and Theodosius landed to repel the Saxons. Becket escaped from England via Sandwich to France. Here Richard I. landed after his Austrian imprisonment and John, king of France, came as a prisoner of the black prince.—London Chronicle.

Tart Retort.

Of Lord Jeffreys, noted for his heartless cruelty, it is recorded when he was chief justice he had a witness before him whose evasive answers aroused the judge's ire. The witness wore an exceedingly long and bushy beard. Said Jeffreys, "If your conscience is as large as your beard you'll swear anything." Unabashed, the witness retorted, "If your lordship measures consciences by beards your lordship has none at all."

Punch and Judy.

Turkey is far from being the only oriental land in which a performance very like the English Punch and Judy can be found. Travelers have described entertainments of the kind in Persia, Japan, Kamchatka, India, Egypt, Syria, Nubia, Siam, Pegu, Ava, Cochin-China, China and Tartary. Mr. Villiers Stuart observed the Egyptian Punch flooring the mamcur (chief magistrate) and his cavasses quite in the style of the British Punch's conduct toward beadles and policemen, though in the Egyptian version the play ended morally with the hanging of Punch. The hero belongs to all ages as well as to most lands. Some have traced him to the Atellan farces of early Italy, and he has even been recognized in ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics.—London Standard.

Chanak-Kalesi.

Chanak-Kalesi, the straggling town near the "narrows" of the Dardanelles, means "earthenware castle" in Turkish and is so called from a celebrated pottery on the Asiatic side of the strait. An agent from this pottery used to be always on the lookout for a wandering European and hooked on to every passing ship. His boatload of gaudy crockery was generally more remarkable for gilding and tawdry color than for taste. But the forms of the vessels were often graceful, even classical, and specimens of the tall water jugs he sells, or once sold, can be seen throughout the Levant, though seldom in London.—London Chronicle.

A Swiss Philanthropy.

The custom still obtains in Switzerland, though not so generally as formerly, of newly married couples making a small gift of money immediately after the wedding ceremony to the school funds as a sort of thanksgiving for their education. These funds are used to provide shoes and clothing for poor pupils who would otherwise be unable to attend school.

No Difference.

Jinks—Which women have the worst tempers, blonds or brunettes? Binks—My wife has been both, and I could not see any difference.—New York Times.

A very heavy blast was discharged at the Whiterock quarries on Monday afternoon wrecking a steam shovel which was located some distance away and also burying a number of cars used for hauling stone. Fortunately nobody was injured, although the accident caused damage to the amount of possibly $2,000. It was said to be due to carelessness on the part of a foreigner while attending to the blasting.

Isaac P. Miller, of Philadelphia, and Anthony Robinson, of Haverford, motored to Bellefonte this week, leaving Philadelphia early Monday morning and making the trip by easy stages. While Mr. Miller's activities in the life insurance world prevent his getting back to old home scenes more than once or twice a year, he somehow manages his itinerary to land him here during trout season. He and Mr. Robinson will whip the streams nearby Bellefonte for several days before returning to Philadelphia.

D. I. Willard was an arrival home this week from Florida, where he spent two weeks seeking pleasure and dodging the cold blasts that have made everybody in the northern sections uncomfortable. At that, he arrived home just in time to walk into the most disagreeable weather we have had for some time. "The Growth of a Great Modern Utility" was the subject of a most interesting and instructive lecture in the auditorium of the High School building on Thursday evening of last week, the speaker being a visiting representative of The Bell Telephone Co. of Penna. An appreciative audience was in attendance. The lecture was one in which the speaker related the history of the telephone from the day of its exhibition at the Philadelphia Centennial in 1876 down to the present time when the great Bell system handles twenty-seven million messages daily. A particularly interesting phase of the lecture was the explanation of how the Bell Telephone Co. instructs its operatives, looks after their health, etc.

Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National Organizer and State Vice-President of the W. C. T. U., will be in Bellefonte Friday evening, May 28th, to deliver one of her renowned addresses on temperance with suffrage thrown in, at the Court House at eight o'clock. Admission free. Mrs. Parsels is likened to Mrs. Armour, of Georgia, and is called "The Pennsylvania Cyclone". She is said to be, by such men as Dean Holmes, of State College and Mr. Brandt of the Anti-Saloon League, one of the very best women speakers they have ever heard. A Berwick, Pa. newspaper said of her—"Mrs. Parsels spoke to more than 800 men and women here in what was termed the most forceful temperance sermon ever heard in Berwick." She comes to Centre County from Rochester and Ithaca, New York, where she has been conducting successful meetings for the last few weeks. As every-one so enjoyed Mr. Banks on the evening of the 17th, so all will have reason to be equally pleased with Mrs. Parsels. Everybody welcome—Free to all.
